Doctors disagree as to the determining cause of the unnoying group of symptoms which in their entirety are commonly called hay fever. While ome contend that it is purely a neu-oses, the most general opinion is that it is caused by the pollen of grasses and flowers, and hence it is prevalent only when they are in bloom. In the United States the pollen of the Ambrosia artemisia folia is regarded as being chiefly causative of hay fever, though the rose comes in for its share of odium as a factor in the production of the dis-

In explanation of the mechanism of the disease it has been suggested that the granules of the police cells, which are much smaller than corpuscles, enter the blood vessels by actual pene-tration of the walls, and that it is not improbable that the malaise experi-enced in hay fever is due to the presence of this granular matter in the general circulation. But whatever may be the cause of this malady, the dis-tressing symptoms often tax the inremuity of physician and patient for heir relief in vain. Some methods of treatment depend upon the mechanical prevention of accession of pollen grains o susceptible mucous membrane, and thers upon the use of agents for the relief of irritation already set up.

A rational method of prevention would seem to be, if the pollen theory of causation be accepted, removal dur ug the accustomed period of attack to locality freest from vegetation, and specially the noxious Ambrosia arnisiafolia, a condition perhaps best secured by an ocean voyage. Since revention is, however, impracticable or the majority, palliation of, or relief from the distressing symptoms is what is chiefly demanded, and here the annesthetic proporties of cocaine would seem a priori to make it a valuable A large portion of the elifeators are members of the frateratics, and in many cases actively associated with remedy.
